In connection with a current study being made by PFIAB into the effectiveness of the collection of human intelligence by various U. S. agencies, PFIAB staff members have been traveling abroad visiting various U. S. establishments, including brief visits with our Legal Attaches.

We have been receiving communications from the Legal Attaches after these visits by the PFIAB staff members who have been concentrating most of their time abroad in visits with Central Intelligence Agency stations and Defense Attaches. In most instances the visits with our Legal Attaches have been essentially courtesy calls, and the PFIAB representatives have not raised any problems or indicated any new approaches which would affect the Bureau.

A PFIAB team recently visited briefly with our Legal Attache in Singapore. The visit was cordial, and the PFIAB representatives were briefed by the Legal Attache concerning the functions of his office. During this visit, one of the PFIAB representatives commented that PFIAB's current visits to U. S. establishments abroad are based on a concern in high Government circles that not enough is being done in the area of human collection of intelligence and that PFIAB is attempting to determine what can be done either to improve the existing procedures or to create more effective procedures. He stated that much of the concern centers around what he described as a parochialism among some Federal agencies and

Our Legal Attache in Singapore advised the PFIAB representative that his relations with the Central Intelligence Agency and other U. S. representatives in the area he covers are excellent.

During the same visit, another of the PFIAB

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] As a result of his discussion with the PFIAB representatives, our Legal Attache in Singapore formed the impression that the ultimate objective of the PFIAB may be to form operational intelligence groups within U. S. Embassies consisting of

[REDACTED]
If this were to come about, it would require a significant adjustment of our existing policy requiring that our Legal Attaches avoid becoming operational, but carry out their responsibilities through the cooperation of friendly foreign police and security agencies. This policy is based upon the provisions of the National Security Act of 1947 [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] The fact that the host governments in the countries covered by our Legal Attaches realize that our representatives are not operational has contributed to the excellent relations we have developed with the police and security agencies in these countries, whereas clandestine operational activity such as that which the Central Intelligence Agency is responsible for always carries the risk of a breach of relations with host government agencies.

On 11/2/72

[redacted] CIA, asked if Mr. William O. Cregar, Section Chief, Nationalities Intelligence Section, and the Bureau's alternate member on the United States Intelligence Board (USIB), could give a lecture to a class of 20 CIA intelligence officers undergoing training at CIA Headquarters. The lecture, scheduled for 9 a.m. on 11/8/72, would be confined to information relating to the FBI's jurisdiction in the internal security field and be principally concerned with the FBI's participation in the USIB.

Similar lectures have been handled in the past, the last being 4/12/72. They have been well received by the CIA intelligence officers and have been useful in orienting CIA personnel concerning FBI's jurisdiction and participation in the USIB.

The CIA personnel attending this lecture will be junior and mid-level intelligence officers undergoing training in CIA's intelligence production course. The lecture will last approximately one hour, followed by a question-and-answer period.

ACTION:

If approved, Mr. Cregar will handle this lecture on 11/8/72. in

The Alexandria Division receives numerous requests for expeditious name checks with CIA pertaining to Presidential Appointees and personnel assigned to the Executive Branch of the Government. All of the requests have extremely short deadlines.

Without the assistance of [redacted] and [redacted] the FBI would not have been able to meet its commitments.

[redacted] and [redacted] have over an extended period of time always responded immediately to handling the name checks by dropping the assignments they were performing when called upon.

In view of the above, it is recommended that a letter over the Acting Director's signature be directed to Mr. RICHARD J. HELMS, Director, Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, D. C. 20505 commending [redacted] and [redacted] for their assistance.

Following the regularly scheduled meeting of the United States Intelligence Board this morning, Mr. Helms called a short Executive Session. His purpose was to advise members regarding his future in view of the extensive speculation appearing in the newspapers regarding his leaving the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). Helms stated that he plans to retire in the very near future although he gave no specific date. It is to be noted that Helms will be 30 years old in March of 1973. He has enforced a rule making it mandatory that employees retire from active service with CIA upon reaching the age of 60.

Helms noted that he has absolutely no idea who might succeed him as the Director of CIA other than that which he reads in the newspaper. He stated he has had no conversation with the President and has no idea when an announcement will be made. He did state that the issues discussed in the newspaper regarding his disagreements with Dr. Kissinger are completely false, and that minutes of the United States Intelligence Board meetings would clearly show he had no substantive disagreements with Dr. Kissinger.

Attached is a draft copy of the proposed Chapter 5 entitled "Domestic Activities" of the captioned book which was furnished confidentially through Liaison by [redacted] Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The author of the book is Lyman Kirkpatrick, former CIA official who resigned from that agency in 1965 when he was Executive Director-Comptroller, to join the faculty of Brown University. Kirkpatrick has submitted the manuscript for his forthcoming book for review by CIA in accordance with that agency's policy requiring such action by its former employees.

[redacted] stated that Kirkpatrick's book is an overall study of the U. S. Intelligence Community. He stated that Kirkpatrick is a competent individual who still maintains friendly relations with CIA and is generally highly regarded. His book is not antagonistic towards CIA or other U. S. agencies and is being reviewed by CIA only to be sure that it does not reveal anything considered still to be sensitive. [redacted] stated that CIA can require the deletion of classified or sensitive information but does not have any other editorial control over the manuscript other than to tactfully suggest changes to the author.

In the attached Chapter 5, Kirkpatrick very effectively argues for the need for specialized training for intelligence officers in order that intelligence agencies can be staffed by highly trained professionals. Most of the Chapter repeats information that has previously appeared in the press and is not critical of the Bureau. It was noted, however, that the sentence appearing at the top of Page 139, "Evidence that not only inadequate, but inaccurate information was being presented to the American people by top officials of the government tended to further exacerbate the situation," could possibly be interpreted as being critical of the Bureau or other agencies. This was pointed out to [redacted] who agreed that it was a poor sentence. He stated that CIA would include this sentence among several others from the manuscript which they plan to call to the author's attention and, although he could not guarantee it, [redacted] was reasonably sure that Kirkpatrick would make any reasonable editorial changes suggested by CIA. [redacted] was thanked for making this material available to the Bureau.

On the morning of 1/26/73, [redacted] CIA, telephonically inquired if Mr. W. O. Cregar, Section Chief, Nationalities Intelligence Section, Domestic Intelligence Division and the Bureau's alternate member on the United States Intelligence Board could speak to a group of 30 CIA Intelligence officers undergoing training at CIA's training facility in Warrenton, Virginia. The lecture is scheduled for 1 p.m. on 2/22/73. It would be restricted to a presentation of the structure of the FBI, its jurisdiction in the field of internal security, as well as the Bureau's role on the United States Intelligence Board and cooperation between it and the CIA. Similar lectures have been handled in the past by Section Chief Cregar and they have been found useful in orienting CIA personnel concerning FBI interest.

The lecture will be part of a mid-career development course and [redacted] feels that an hour lecture by Mr. Cregar followed by questions and answers would give these counter intelligence officers a better appreciation of the role the Bureau plays in the intelligence community.

ACTION:

If approved, Mr. Cregar will handle this lecture on 2/22/73 and so advise [redacted]

Recommends members of Training Unit IS-3, Intelligence Division, attend two-week course [REDACTED] given by Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) beginning 5/14/73.

In connection with the formulation of a basic counterintelligence (CI) course for FBI personnel, members of the Training Unit, IS-3, established liaison with training elements of other United States intelligence agencies. In our contacts with CIA an invitation has been received from [REDACTED]

CIA for FBI training personnel to attend [REDACTED]

This course is given regularly and is next scheduled for two weeks beginning 5/14/73. The course is offered during regular office hours Monday through Friday at CIA Headquarters. A copy of the course schedule and curriculum is attached. [REDACTED]

A review of the curriculum and content of the course would be of extreme interest to members of the Training Unit not only for the background information and perspective of CIA operations which will be presented, but also from the point of view of studying CIA presentation and scheduling techniques.

RECOMMENDATION:

That Training Unit Supervisors [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] be designated to attend two-week CIA school commencing 5/14/73.

CIA, telephonically inquired if Mr. W. O. Cregar, Section Chief, CI-2 Section, Intelligence Division, and the Bureau's alternate member on the U. S. Intelligence Board (USIB), could speak to [REDACTED]

The lecture is scheduled for 1:15 p.m., on 5/21/73. It would be restricted to a presentation of the structure of the FBI and its jurisdiction in the field of internal security as well as the FBI's role on the USIB and its relationship with the intelligence community. Similar lectures have been handled in the past by Section Chief Cregar. They have been well received and have been found useful in orienting CIA personnel to FBI responsibilities. The lecture will be approximately one hour in length followed by questions and answers which will give these intelligence officers a better appreciation of the role the Bureau plays in the intelligence community.

ACTION:

If approved, Mr. Cregar will handle this lecture and so advise [REDACTED] telephonically.

The 5/25/73 edition of "The New York Times" under the byline of Seymour M. Hersh captioned "Aid for Radicals Disputed by CIA" contains comments relating to the expansion of Bureau liaison activities abroad commencing in late 1970. The article indicates that Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) reports to the White House did not substantiate the White House contention that "foreign governments were supplying undercover agents and funds to radicals and Black Panther groups in the United States." The CIA conclusions were rejected by the White House and, according to the article, in late 1970, 35 FBI Agents were assigned to intelligence posts overseas in 20 countries. The article went on to state that "Agents had been despatched abroad after a White House meeting of Mr. Nixon, Mr. Kissinger, and Mr. Hoover" and further indicated that the White House had lost confidence in the CIA and decided to move the Bureau into CIA activities abroad to double-check on these activities. The article further stated that the Bureau currently spends three million a year to maintain 40 Agents and 30 clerks in foreign "intelligence liaison units." The article further states that CIA Director Richard Helms was furious apparently at this incursion into CIA activities.

Re: "NEW YORK TIMES" ARTICLE

Referral/Consult

ACTION:

In anticipation of press inquiries as a result of "The New York Times" article and the State Department press briefing, the following is recommended as the Bureau's response: The FBI has historically maintained Agent personnel abroad to maintain liaison with foreign police and intelligence agencies in order to follow-up with these agencies foreign aspects of domestic investigations. The FBI conducts no investigations abroad and is not engaged in operational activities in its foreign posts. It works very closely with the Ambassador and, in the event information is obtained which is outside the scope of FBI responsibilities, it is furnished promptly to the Ambassador and other interested elements of the Embassy and to FBI Headquarters.

Original Filed In 62-115360-

By Jeremiah O'Leary
Star-News Staff Writer

Expansion of FBI operations overseas in October 1970, ostensibly on the orders of President Nixon, was designed to give the White House a worldwide source of intelligence independent of the CIA and the State Department, The Star-News has learned.

This expansion, which remains in effect today, put the FBI in the position of gathering intelligence overseas, which it has no legal authority to do.

It also is a violation of delimitation agreements reached in the post-World War II period under which the CIA's role in domestic intelligence was limited by agreement with J. Edgar Hoover, while the FBI accepted restrictions on overseas operations.

Many of Hoover's top-level assistants opposed the 1970 overseas expansion of FBI activities on legal grounds, because it duplicated CIA efforts and because of the estimated $3 million-a-year cost. But Hoover, although he never showed his top intelligence aides anything in writing, always insisted that the expansion was on the authority of the President himself.

The Star-News was unable to determine whether the new foreign intelligence role of the FBI was Hoover's idea that was approved by the President, or whether the order came down from the White House to Hoover. But observers believe the FBI expansion into overseas intelligence must have had White House blessing or there would have been howls of protest from CIA and State.

THE 1970 expansion raised the number of FBI agents operating overseas to 39, plus 47 clerical employees. In addition to the traditional embassies where FBI agents have long served under the title of legal attaches — Bern, Bonn, Buenos Aires, London, Mexico City, Ottawa, Paris, Rome and Tokyo — Hoover reopened offices in Brazil, Madrid and Manila and established agents in Beirut, Caracas, Copenhagen, Hong Kong, La Paz, Managua, Singapore and Tel Aviv.

At that time it was claimed the purpose was for police liaison in criminal matters, but FBI veterans say the real objective was intelligence gathering.

The expansion came at a time when Hoover and the FBI were under considerable fire for failure of domestic intelligence gathering about radical youth, bombings and dissident black groups.

The old established offices had already had liaison responsibilities in Austria, Liechtenstein, Switzerland, West Germany, the Netherlands, Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, the British Isles, Mexico, Canada, Belgium, France, Liberia, Luxembourg, Monaco, Sierra Leone, Cyprus, Greece, Italy, Turkey, Japan, Taiwan, Okinawa and South Korea.

The expansion gave the FBI intelligence-gathering responsibilities in Lebanon, Colombia, Ecuador, Venezuela, Barbados, Guyana, Trinidad and Tobago, the French and Netherlands Antilles, 10 British West Indian associated states and colonies, Iceland, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Hong Kong, South Vietnam, Bolivia, Peru, Spain, Portugal, the Balearic and Canary Islands, Gibraltar, Morocco, Panama, British Honduras, the five Central American republics, the Philippines, Australia, New Zealand, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia and Israel.

The FBI "legal attaches" operated independently of the American ambassadors and of the CIA and send their reports directly to FBI headquarters in a code unknown to other embassy personnel. It was Hoover's practice to send these intelligence reports directly to the White House, The Star-News was told, without any attempt at coordination with CIA or State Department.

THERE WAS never any inter-agency quarrel about the presence and activities of FBI agents in the continuous nations of Mexico and Canada. And the long-established legal attaches generally had worked out ways of getting along with ambassadors and embassy sections, including CIA.

However, some of the new FBI activities ran into both open and covert opposition. In La Paz, Bolivia, Ambassador Ernest Siracusa had a confrontation with the FBI agent who was sent there when a coded message to Washington from the legal attaché came to the envoy's desk and he could not read it. Siracusa demanded to know the contents and the FBI man had to refuse.

Siracusa fired off a cable to Washington protesting that he was being bypassed by an embassy section ostensibly under his control and in essence was told to let the matter drop. Somewhat the same thing happened in Tel Aviv.

FBI insiders have said that the intelligence gathered by the agents involved in the expansion was at best marginal and often worthless. State Department and CIA personnel generally kept silent or limited themselves to non-public protests about the injection of FBI agents into foreign intelligence. Privately they abhorred the 1970 FBI expansion as both illegal and counter-productive.

Hoover, The Star-News was told reliably, would never brook any efforts by his subordinates to rescind the expansion into foreign intelligence. In May 1970, Hoover had abruptly eliminated the jobs of the FBI liaison men with other government agencies, including CIA and the State Department, and transferred the agents to other duties.

Ironically, it was in June 1970, that Hoover had decisively opposed an inter-agency plan for expanded intelligence operations in the United States which was approved by President Nixon and which called for resumption of wire-tapping, surveillance and even surreptitious entry. This national security plan, disclosed by the White House last May 22, existed for only five days and was never implemented because of Hoover's opposition, the White House said.

Senator William Proxmire (Dem. - Wisconsin) introduced S.1935, a bill to amend Section 102 of the National Security Act of 1947 to prohibit certain activities by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and to limit certain other activities by such agency.

The bill would amend the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 403) by adding a new subsection designed to clarify the role of CIA with regard to domestic activities. The first provision of the new subsection directs that no interpretation of the Act shall be made to authorize CIA to engage in police, law enforcement or internal security activities by itself or in conjunction with any other agency.

The second provision would prohibit CIA from providing assistance to any other Government agency engaged in police, law enforcement or internal security activity unless such assistance is specifically approved by the CIA oversight committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The third provision prohibits the CIA from participating directly or indirectly in any illegal activity in the United States.

The fourth provision prohibits CIA from engaging in any covert action in any foreign country without specific written approval from the CIA oversight committees of the Congress. "Covert action" is defined as having the same meaning as used by the National Security Council based on the understanding of that term by the intelligence community of the Federal Government and the practice of the intelligence community during the years, 1950-1970.

Memorandum to Mr. E. S. Miller
Re: S.1935
93rd Congress 1st Session

The second provision of this proposed legislation has a direct bearing on the normal routine liaison between CIA and the FBI, for, it would require approval of such activity by the CIA oversight committees of the Congress. Conceivably, distinct limitations could be placed on the CIA which would have a serious impact on our intelligence work. The progress of this bill should be followed closely.

RECOMMENDATION:

That the Congressional Services Office follow the progress of S.1935 and advise the Intelligence Division.

EXPANSION OF FBI
OPERATIONS OVERSEAS

A featured article (attached) by Jeremiah O'Leary in "The Sunday Star" June 10, 1973, has been copied in the foreign press and has raised questions concerning FBI operations abroad. O'Leary stated that these had been materially expanded in October, 1970, "ostensibly on the orders of President Nixon" to give the White House a worldwide source of intelligence independent of CIA and State. He further claimed that the expansion was opposed by many FBI officials, that FBI intelligence collection is without legal authority, and that CIA and State view it as "both illegal and counter-productive."

These are the facts:

In September, 1970, former Director Hoover advised that he had been asked by the President to expand his foreign operation to collect political intelligence. At that time, we had eleven offices abroad manned by 28 Agents and 32 clerks, for a total of 60 FBI employees. These offices were in Bern, Bonn, Buenos Aires, Hong Kong, London, Madrid, Mexico City, Ottawa, Paris, Rome, and Tokyo. Following brief negotiation with State, six additional offices were opened during December, 1970, in Tel Aviv, Caracas, Managua, La Paz, Copenhagen, and Beirut. In May, 1971, Mr. Hoover indicated that the President had asked him to expand further and, following protracted negotiation with State and opposition by former Assistant to the Director W. C. Sullivan, offices were opened during early 1972 in Brasilia, Manila, and Singapore. This has resulted in our present complement abroad of 41 Special Agents and 47 clerks, for a total of 88 personnel in twenty foreign offices.

FBI has had Agents stationed abroad since early 1940. They are not operational and conduct no investigations. They are entirely dependent upon the law enforcement and security agencies of the host government for the coverage of FBI leads overseas. They maintain regular liaison with these agencies, both in the countries where they are stationed and in other countries which they visit on road trips. During the course of these liaison activities, they receive all sorts of information, much of it relating to law enforcement work but some of it relating to political intelligence. From the outset, they have cabled to the Bureau all matters of possible U. S. interest and FBI Headquarters has promptly disseminated such information to other agencies having an interest. The cable traffic to and from the Legal Attaches is and always has been in code, whether it deals with kidnappings, administrative matters, political intelligence, or applicant work. The only change in operations that occurred as a result of the President's requests that FBI collect political intelligence was a formalization of the practice which had been in effect for many years. Commencing in January, 1971, and continuing through the present, records have been kept of the number of political intelligence items submitted by each office. There is nothing illegal about this procedure. Each Legal Attache, before submitting an item, must coordinate the information with interested agencies in the Embassy where he is stationed. This would, in practically every instance, mean that both CIA and State in the Embassy are informed of the item before or simultaneously with its submission to the Bureau by cable. On receipt, each item is carefully reviewed by the desk in the FBI Intelligence Division which is concerned with the subject matter and, if deemed suitable, the item is then dispatched by teletype to Dr. Kissinger at the White House and to you.

Although the offices opened since 1970 were specifically intended to submit political intelligence, they have also made substantial contributions to the regular work of the Bureau. The O'Leary article is causing problems abroad and the Mexican press is protesting the operations of both CIA and FBI in that country. The FBI representative in Bern states that a Swiss reprint of the O'Leary article has caused him to prepare the following for the U. S. Information Service Office in Bern to issue in the event inquiries are received: "For years it has been public knowledge that the FBI has had representatives in various cities throughout the world since shortly after the end of World War II. These representatives are not operational, but conduct liaison with the police agencies in numerous foreign countries in matters of mutual interest, much in the manner of Interpol." The FBI representative in Mexico is being scrupulously careful to avoid attracting attention during the current newspaper publicity.

The Attorney General

We are not "pushing" the intelligence collection program. No pressure is being used on the FBI representatives to increase their production of intelligence items, and this activity occupies an extremely minor portion of their time as nearly all of them are fully occupied in handling the Bureau's regular work.
